

Two years ago, I arrived in Cambodia as a foreign pilgrim—unsure of what lay ahead but full of hope and faith. Today, I write as someone who has been shaped by love, community, and God’s grace.

The Journey of Transformation

As I struggled with language and unfamiliar customs, I slowly discovered that God was not only sending me to Cambodia, but with Cambodia to walk together.

The power of community

It was through people through smiles, shared meals, and honest prayers—that I no longer felt like a stranger.

Connected in God’s Mission

Throughout the GMF journey, I engaged with fellow missionaries, mentors, and leaders from around the world.

In trainings, webinars, and shared worship, I experienced the beauty of the global Church—diverse yet united in Christ.

These connections reminded me: mission is never a solo journey, but a shared calling in God’s great story.

God's Faithfulness and Fruit

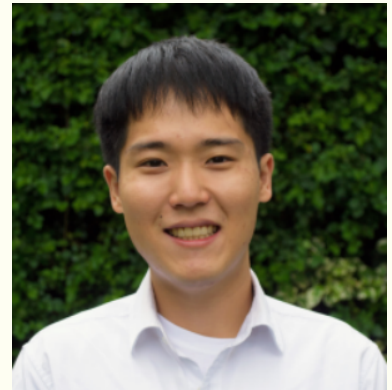

Looking back, I am overwhelmed by how much more I received than I gave. God used my small efforts, but the true work was His—from quiet heart changes to unexpected doors opening. I realized that more than what I did for others, it was God who ministered deeply to me. If there was any fruit, it was His doing. I was simply invited to witness and serve.

Looking Ahead - With the Same Grace

As I leave Cambodia, I carry its stories and tears with me. I remain a pilgrim, but now walk as one deeply loved—beloved by God and many. God’s mission continues in his World, and so does our partnership. Thank you for sending me for mission of God. Let us keep walking together in Christ.
